

The Suspects

Fred Ford

Fred is one of the richest, most dashing and debonair men to frequent The Half Moon Club. And while he's one of the most pursued men in the club, he remains single, devoted only to his cat, Miffy and his single status. He is fun-loving and enjoys dancing, regardless of his partner. Fred wears a pair of slacks, a white dress shirt, a vest and a fedora hat.

Hazel Turner

Sassy, saucy and full of spunk, Hazel gives any man a run for his money. The typical flapper, Hazel enjoys smoking from a long cigarette holder, dancing the Charleston and drinking to excess. She loves her jazz loud, her whiskey strong and is often one of the last people to leave The Half Moon Club at the end of the evening. Because of her loyalty, she has become friends with the owner, Charles "Lucky" Coleman. Hazel wears an extravagant, frilly flapper dress typical of the era.

Dick Devins

Detective Devins has been on the force for years and is quick to interrogate suspects with his fists. He has made a name for himself in the city with his arrest and confession record, and he's always thinking about the advancement of his career. Detective Devins wears a trench coat, fedora hat and a notebook he keeps in his breast pocket to keep track of information he receives from interrogating witnesses.

Leonard Lewis

It's not easy being a bartender during prohibition, but Leonard managed to score himself the gig because he's a personal friend of The Half Moon Club's owner, Charles "Lucky" Coleman. He is charismatic and loves to chat with the patrons, and his magnetic personality makes him privy to all sorts of the club patrons' dark secrets. Leonard wears slacks, a dress shirt, a vest and a hat.

Charles "Lucky" Coleman

Charles "Lucky" Coleman (AKA "Lucky") owns The Half Moon Club as well as another speakeasy in town called The Caterpillar Club. Lucky extends his welcome to all types of patrons from all walks of life – providing they can pay for an evening of entertainment. While no one has proof, it is suspected he is also the head of a local mafia ring and his "darker" business dealings are what enable him to run his establishment in relative peace, despite prohibition. Lucky wears a pinstriped suit and a sharp black fedora.

Ruby Miller

Ruby is a woman who just can't say no... she loves to party and thrives on the attention of men. She claims she has recently left her high society family to live it up as a flapper, much to the chagrin of her father. She has vocal training and her family planned for her to become a professional opera singer, but now she puts all that at risk as she parties and drinks her nights away. She's new to town, is quite secretive and is usually accompanied to The Half Moon Club by at least one "wet blanket" - a male chaperone. Ruby wears a frilly Flapper-style dress, a headband and carries a cigarette holder.